When you're Austin Mahone and headlining a sold-out North American tour, life is filled with sound checks, meet and greets, and, in this case, your very first Teen Vogue cover shoot. We joined the 18-year-old pop star in Phoenix, where, in Austin's words, it's "so hot out you can cook food on the sidewalk." True story. But the 110-degree heat didn't faze the upbeat singer, who arrived to set straight off an overnight bus ride from Texas. "It's incredible being here," he said. "It's my first major cover!" Our dream team to pull it off? Photographer Boo George and stylist Havana Laffitte, who conceptualized a swoonworthy shoot inspired by classic heartthrobs ►

Elvis Presley and Bob Dylan. Music-obsessed Austin was (naturally) our on-set DJ, playing Usher, Drake, and the Jersey Boys* soundtrack (to get in character), plus some of his own new music(!), while being photographed all over downtown Phoenix. But it wasn't long before Austin had to rush off to prepare for his concert that night, a few blocks away, where screaming fans were already lined up. We tagged along to watch the show and ended the night on an even higher note: partaking in a pizza party backstage with Austin and a few lucky fans (an idea he got from Taylor Swift). Austin even arrived at the concert venue sporting the hairstyle from his Teen Vogue photo session.

"I wanted the look to be in the '50s nostalgia realm," explains hairstylist Wesley O'Meara, who turned to bad-boy icon (and popular wall-dweller) James Dean for the ultimate hairspiration. Although this style is completely different from Austin's daily 'do, the star was totally into it. "He was really chill and down to try new things," O'Meara says. So how does one transform into an instant greaser? With moldable pomade, a comb, and a flick of the wrist. Well, that ... and a little sweat. "It was scorching hot on the day of the shoot," O'Meara says. "Usually sweat gets in the way of having a great-hair day, but we wanted him a bit gritty, so the weather actually played in our favor!"

Austin channeled his throwback rockabilly persona so well that fans on set almost lost their cool. "Seeing everyone's reaction was the best part," O'Meara says. "It was amazing to watch people get that excited." □

FAMILY TREE

It's hard to imagine there could be a creature walking this earth who is gorgeous in the exact same way that Cindy Crawford is—but yes. Meet 13-year-old Kaia Gerber, Cindy's mini-me. I can also report that Kaia inherited her mama's midwestern sweet gene as well: She's open, friendly, and unspoiled. Sailor Brinkley Cook, 16-year-old daughter of Christie Brinkley, has appeared on our pages many times; I love her sunny smile and good energy. This month she went to Italy with us. Model-musician Rafferty Law, 18, son of British actor Jude, is new to Teen Vogue but clearly has all of his dad's charisma and blond beauty, as you can see on page 98. Naturally critics will charge that children of the famous have a lot of career advantages (both connections and genetics working for them), and there is certainly truth in that. However, you can't blame the kids for the fact that the public is often far more fascinated by familiar faces and celebrity personas than by oftentimes anonymous models. I mean, who wouldn't be curious to check out Cindy Crawford's offspring? Call it the Kendall Factor, but I think that knowing some background on the beautiful people in fashion stories makes them come more alive for the viewer. In any case, Teen Vogue has always had a ton of fun discovering the next generation, and this issue is no exception.

MARINA LARROUDÉ

"Growing up in Brazil, I was never interested in buying toys—I always wanted a new pair of ballet flats," remembers Marina Larroudé, Teen Vogue's fashion director. Living in a small town, she didn't have access to designers or high-end shops, so she made monthly trips to the local magazine store to buy her favorite publications. Determined to work in the industry, Marina landed an internship at Brazilian Vogue while still in college, but she'd always had her sights set on New York, and made the move shortly after graduating. Marina's days are filled with market appointments, meetings with stylists and designers, and scouting new collections, but it's planning photo shoots that she enjoys most. "I love thinking about the big picture and seeing it take shape—it's so fulfilling to see the final product."

CHRISTIAN LOUBOUTIN

"I was very young," Christian Louboutin recalls of the moment he first fell in love with high heels. "A woman was walking down the stairs and started dancing. The way she moved in the heels was so beautiful." From then on, he was hooked. Since launching his own collection in the early 1990s, Christian's name has become synonymous with imaginative, provocative chaussures—and their signature red soles. The legend is now trying his hand at beauty, and gives Teen Vogue's Elaine Welteroth the full story on his lustworthy line of nail colors in "Sole Mates" (page 92). But don't think his expertise precludes him from the usual new-adventure jitters: "I've been learning a lot about patience," he says. "The smaller the object is, the more you have to pay attention to detail." The moment we saw his collection of enviable hues, it was clear they were worth the wait.

SHEENA SMITH & SAILOR BRINKLEY COOK

This year Bulgari celebrates its 130th anniversary—more than a century of stunning jewelry and accessories inspired by the company's Italian heritage. To commemorate the occasion, Sheena Smith traveled to its headquarters in Rome with Sailor Brinkley Cook, Christie Brinkley's daughter, who is quickly making her own mark in the modeling world ("Roman Diary," page 114). "We wanted someone who embodies the classic, timeless elegance of the brand," Sheena says of her travel companion. "And Sailor is that girl!" She styled the young ingenue as they explored the city, accenting each look with a sprinkling of Bulgari baubles. "We wanted to mirror the rich aesthetic of the brand: colorful gowns and lush, textured fabrics." Sailor played the part to perfection, channeling Hollywood icons (and Bulgari fans!) like Grace Kelly, with a modern twist. "Everything was so beautiful," Sailor says of the trip—and the jewels. "It was really special."

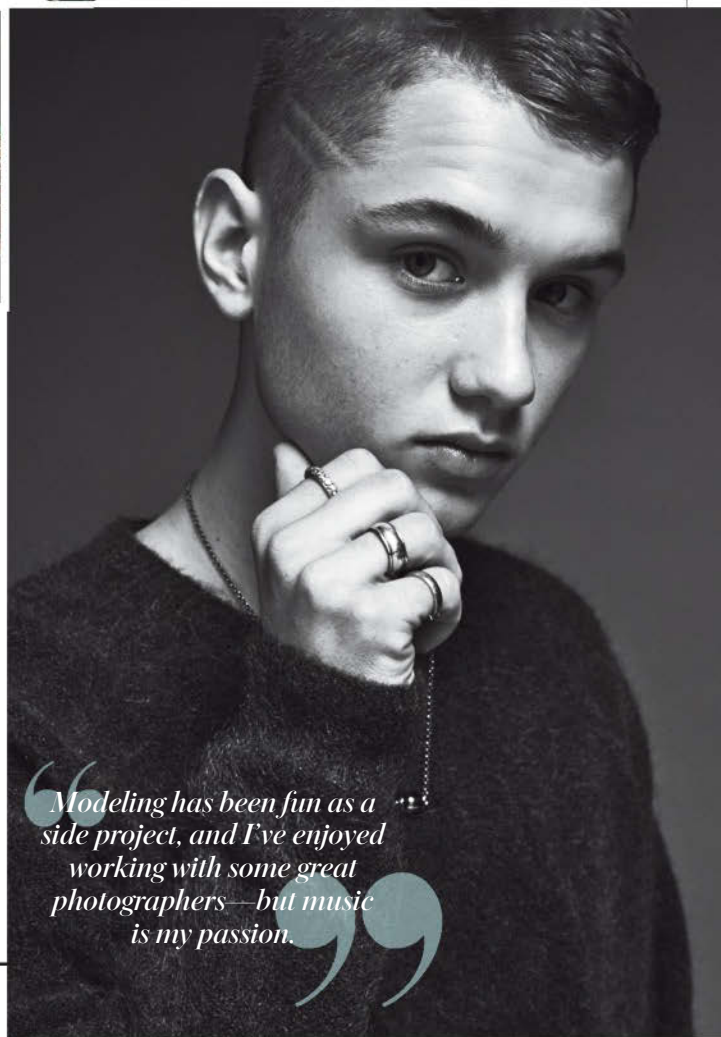

RAFFERTYLAW

In this issue, Rafferty Law, the son of actor Jude Law and Sadie Frost, sports the season's rugged menswear trend in "Adventure Land" (page 98).

He is joined by up-and-coming model Kristine

Froseth on California's picture-perfect coastline, which appealed to the It Brit, whose interests include photography. "The scenery around Santa Barbara was spectacular—I loved the views," he says. The 18-year-old made his runway debut this past summer at the DKNY menswear show in London—a big deal for a newcomer. But even though he's been blessed with a model's good looks, Rafferty's aspirations are more rock 'n' roll than runway.

"I'm in a band, Dirty Harrys. My best friend Marley and I write all the songs, and we've been playing gigs around London." When it comes to the future, the multitasking teen knows what he's after: "I would love to keep evolving with my band, recording more songs, and touring. I think I will always be in music!" □

"Modeling has been fun as a side project, and I've enjoyed working with some great photographers—but music is my passion."

LEANDRA MEDINE

In an excerpt from the new edition of The Teen Vogue Handbook, the girl behind Man Repeller spills about her meteoric rise.

I started with a simple concept: If it's in fashion, he probably won't like it. And after a trip to Topshop, where Leandra Medine and a friend had been poking fun at all the "man-repelling" clothes, a blogspot was born.

"I didn't think much about the format," Medine admits. "My mom took the photos—but that's because it wasn't a personal style blog to begin with." Originally Medine intended Man Repeller to be a cathartic outlet, something she worked on in addition to her journalism degree at The New School in New York City. "Frankly, not very much went into a post. I would just write what I felt like writing." Often, that meant putting on one of her masculine-leaning outfits with a witty feminine twist, striking a self-deprecating pose, and posting it online. ➤

the magic of

The fashion world quickly caught on. Teen Vogue was among the first, with a feature on a fledgling Medine and her denim tips back in August 2011. Meanwhile, industry insiders and girls in search of a down-to-earth style heroine bookmarked Medine's online journal, and were frequently amused by her adventures in a gold lamé jumpsuit or drop-crotch shorts. "My motto is this: You'll never regret the fashion mistakes you make—only the ones you didn't," she says. "I wish I knew that when I was 16. There's really no use in regretting something as silly as not wearing a bow tie to your prom."

While other style blogs focused on glamorous, head-to-toe designer looks, Medine was effectively doing the opposite. Naturally, it was her blog that took off fastest. She coined the term "arm party" for her way with piling bracelets from wrist to elbow, and later moved on to stacking rings, which arguably prompted a jewelry revolution that continues today. The opportunities started rolling in: a jewelry collaboration with New York-based accessories line Dannijo, a profile in The New York Times, and a bag designed for Nina Ricci, among them. In 2013 Medine released her debut book, Man Repeller: Seeking Love. Finding Overalls.

Today, Man Repeller is a team of six. "We're posting five stories a day," she says. They are also clocking upward of 660,000 followers on Instagram and 200,000 on Twitter, with speculated monthly page views in the millions.

For someone who has built a business out of wearing tongue-in-cheek outfits, it comes as a surprise that Medine judges true style with one simple test: "What can you do with a white T-shirt and jeans?" she asks. "Simon Doonan once told me that although I dress pretty normally, there's always a twist. A why-didn't-I-think-of-that moment; I really appreciated that compliment." □

HARD-KNOCK LIFE
Quvenzhané and Rose Byrne give triple-threat performances on the New York City film set.

The original movie version of Annie, with its shameless optimism and 1980s-meets-1930s aesthetic, has been a lifelong favorite of mine. Although I'm still trying to get some of the dance steps down, I can quote just about every word.

Perhaps Giorgio Armani felt the same way when he selected Tinseltown tyke Quvenzhané Wallis, the 11-year-old star of this winter's modern remake, to be the first face of his Armani Junior line. Not only is Quvenzhané one of the youngest Academy Award nominees in history, for her film debut in 2012's Beasts of the Southern Wild, she's also the littlest actress to catch the fashion powerhouse's attention. "I was honored to wear his custom gown to the Oscars—it made me feel like a princess," says the ingenue as she takes five with me on the Armani Junior campaign set in New York City.

In between making films, doing shoots like our latest Young Hollywood portfolio, and rubbing elbows with boldface names, this Louisiana-born sixth-grader actually leads a pretty regular life. "I am enjoying my success and I'm a normal kid," she says, adding that she loves science and riding her scooter.

And while her classmates have no trouble pronouncing her unique moniker, others just won't go there. "What annoys me is when people don't even try to say my name, or just want to call me 'Q.' I'm sure they would like to be called by their name," she asserts playfully, flashing the most priceless accessory on the whole set: her giant smile. After all, as her onscreen alter ego says, you're never fully dressed without one. —A.B.

"My favorite piece is the tuxedo," she says. "It feels comfortable and looks dressy." Armani Junior tuxedo jacket, shirt, $305, and tuxedo pants, $260. Details, see In This Issue.

TOP MAN

With $25,000 from the CFDA/Teen Vogue Scholarship in his back pocket, Franky Tran and the jewelry-influenced pieces he's created are going somewhere, fast.

Growing up in Greenville, South Carolina, Franky Tran had no idea that fashion design was about to become his not-so-distant future. "It was actually never something that I intended to pursue," he confesses. "Where I was raised, nobody was really in tune with fashion." Unbeknownst to him, Franky was already knee-deep in the trade, regularly cutting up secondhand clothes and modifying them for his own wardrobe. In high school he applied his hands-on tendencies to metalwork and ceramics, developing a keen sense of craftsmanship and quality along the way. But it wasn't until Franky enrolled in the School of the Art Institute of Chicago and took his first design class that he finally realized fashion was his true calling. "I fell in love and haven't looked back since," the junior says. "It's a rabbit hole!"

When Franky heard about the annual CFDA/Teen Vogue Scholarship in partnership with Target, he didn't think twice about applying. "Even if the panel hated my work, they would at least still look at it, which is an opportunity in itself," he explains. "I had nothing to lose." The sophisticated and distinctive collection he submitted was influenced by the work of renowned jewelry designer and Council of Fashion Designers of America member Pamela Love. Franky had been a fan of her accessories even before his interest in fashion officially began, having done research projects on her back in high school. So a nod to his longtime idol seemed like an appropriate approach. Franky drew inspiration from her personal style and artistry and created clothing that echoed the aesthetic of her work.

"Overcoming the challenges along the way makes designing an incredibly gratifying experience," Franky says. So what's in store for this creative force? "In five years I just hope I'm better about doing my laundry." Well, that and a little world-dominating, too.

CLASSIC COOL

"I have fun acting but I don't feel pressure to be the best—it's just something I'm experiencing for myself."

Girl of the Moment

DYLAN PENN

The burgeoning actress and model on her Hollywood aspirations and why she's finally stepping in front of the camera.

Dylan at home with her mom and dad in 1991

wasn't really interested in acting when I was younger—I was more curious about what went on behind the scenes," confesses Dylan Penn. So what changed her mind? "Both of my parents told me that a good director should know what it's like to be an actor, so I decided to try it out." And when your parents are Sean Penn and Robin Wright, that's advice you take to heart. Before Dylan began acting (she appears in The Condemned, out in 2015) and modeling, she held jobs much like any other 23-year-old: from hostessing and babysitting to delivering pizzas and, perhaps most applicably, script editing. "It came easily to me, and I learned so much about the writing process of a film," she says. No matter what she's working on, Dylan keeps one thing in mind: "I always want to stay true to myself. As long as I'm doing something I believe in, there should be no regrets." —ALEXANDRA THURMOND

SPRING
2015

Red and yellow and pink and green ... you know the lyrics. It's time to dress in the all-weather-friendly rainbow of hues that Valentino singled out for resort and that Chanel, Peter Pilotto, Balmain, and Preen by Thornton Bregazzi championed for spring. Designers showed their true colors in more ways than one: Even rebel songstress Miley Cyrus chimed in with a tuneful palette of can't-miss-'em accessories in her collaboration with Jeremy Scott.

The sidewalk played runway for a host of kaleidoscopic getups, too. Emerging street-style star Irene Kim (on the previous page) sent flashbulbs popping at New York Fashion Week when she stepped out in a circle skirt featuring almost all the colors of the spectrum. Her complementary accessory? Neon-striped hair!

But that's not to say die-hard color-phobes need to bankroll a new wardrobe this gift-giving season. Simply add a prismatic watch or a multistriped sandal to your wish list to make an otherwise dark outfit stand out. Now who's afraid of the winter blues?

CANDY COATED

"I wear the same old jeans and T-shirt," says Sandy, seen here in her Manhattan studio. "So I love a good coat to dress everything up."

SANDY LIANG

This New York City designer is causing a stir with her cool, cozy line.

When Sandy Liang conceived of a debut collection featuring amorphous cotton candy-colored shearling coats, voluminous construction-worker jeans, and a boxy denim jacket embellished with earrings, it was with this maxim in mind: "Things should be funny, otherwise you forget them," says the Parsons The New School for Design graduate. Her starting point was grandmas tootling around Chinatown, body piercings, and the bike messengers she saw zipping across Manhattan. Only one season in, and the line's witty, easy-to-wear appeal has already won over street-style stars like Kate Foley and model Soo Joo Park. "Instagram is a great way to get your name out there without being pushy," she surmises of the countless images of her pieces on stylish backs fluttering around cyberspace. But rather than digital domination, Sandy's ultimate aim is this: "I want people to feel happy when they wear my clothes or see them on the street." —ESTHER ADAMS ACHARA

Sister, Sister

Only a few years apart, Meredith and Lizzie are a lot alike. They both love beauty and fashion, watching movies, shopping, and coming up with new video ideas for Meredith's channel.

Moisturizer is Meredith's go-to product during the winter. Olay Fresh Effects (Dew Over!) Hydrating Gel Moisturizer provides 24-hour hydration, and won't clog pores.

Dressing up!

Meredith is inspired by seasonal trends, but puts her own spin on them. She dares to pair navy and black and leather-on-leather.

Lizzie finds staple items, like this moto jacket, that she can style different ways.

PITCH PERFECT

Move over, Adele! Ella Henderson is the next brilliant Brit with a set of powerhouse pipes. ➤

Fashion Stylist: Nicolas Klam; hair, Bobby Elliot for Oribi; makeup, Dawn Broussard using Bobbi Brown.

The easy thing would have been to record what's been written for me and launch right after The [U.K.] X Factor," reveals 18-year-old Ella Henderson of her proposed path to fame. "But I didn't want to do the easy thing." The savvy singer-songwriter is the latest reality-series alum to join the likes of One Direction and Jennifer Hudson—internationally renowned stars who have gone on to win Billboard Music Awards and Oscars despite their early exits from TV talent shows. But unlike those contestants, the blonde breakout with the chills-inducing voice took a two-year hiatus after her unexpected departure to find her own spotlight. "I wanted to feel like I was physically and mentally ready to face everything that goes into being in the music industry," she says. And with the help of her record-label boss, she got there. "For Simon Cowell to believe in me and to say, 'It doesn't matter how long it takes—we want you to put something out only when you're ready for us to listen,' really inspired me."

"I wanted to feel like I was physically and mentally ready [for] ... the music industry"

That extra vote of confidence propelled Ella to stardom and prepared the pop phenom for the big leagues. By now she's traveled the world ("It's so strange when you're in a place you've never been before and you hear your song on the radio"), worked with Babyface ("He's one of my all-time favorite producers"), and written with OneRepublic's Ryan Tedder (who's also collaborated with her idol, Adele) on her first single, "Ghost," which shot to number one on the U.K.'s Official Singles Chart ("That was mental!"). With the U.S. release of Ella's standout debut album, Chapter One, slated for January, it's worth noting: Good things come to those who wait. —LIANA WESTON

Check out what we're into right now.

With her sophomore release, 22-year-old powerhouse (and the brains behind Icona Pop's "I Love It" and Iggy Azalea's "Fancy") Charli XCX is finally claiming her title as the reigning queen of pop punk. Jam-packed with hypnotic hits, Sucker is the musical manifesto that will send her into the superstar stratosphere.

CHARLI XCX

This sci-fi nail-biter—starring Matthew McConaughey, Anne Hathaway, and Jessica Chastain—is about space explorers on a mission to save humanity. And with a stellar performance from Twilight's Mackenzie Foy (left), it's an edge-of-your-seat flick you won't want to miss.

PLAYLIST FOR THE DEAD AND A THOUSAND PIECES OF YOU

Both Michelle Falkoff's Playlist for the Dead and Claudia Gray's first novel in the Firebird trilogy, A Thousand Pieces of You, tell distinctive and gripping narratives about a shared human challenge: how to deal with the passing of a loved one. major cultural chord, it follows the story of high schoolers and their parents as they navigate the ways the Internet has changed their relationships, communication, and, in Elena's character's case, self-image.

"Allison suffers from an eating disorder," she explains of her character. "I could relate to her because, like all of us at some point, I've dealt with body insecurities." Elena even spent time on pro-anorexia websites before she took the role to better understand what Allison was going through. "She's so busy on those sites, she's not even communicating with her dad about her issues," Elena says.

The cast, which includes Adam Sandler and Jennifer Garner, also features a bevy of young Hollywood all-stars: Ansel Elgort, Kaitlyn Dever, Travis Tope, and Will Peltz (Nicola's talented older bro). "We all have such a bond from shooting in Austin," Elena says. "You know Ansel—he's the life of the party. He's so funny. We would blast music, go laser-tagging, and hang in each other's hotel rooms. I'll never forget the wrap party, all the dancing we did. We were busting out some serious moves."

The unwaveringly focused teen, who, impressively enough, already has her high school diploma, credits director Reitman for discovering her, and her big fat Greek family for supporting her dream. "I'm giving it everything I have."

SHADOW PLAY

"Always use a bit of concealer or primer on your eyelids to create a good base for eye shadow," says Philips. "It guarantees a longer-lasting look."

End-of-year celebrations call for a particularly festive feel. "It's your moment to be experimental and daring," says Peter Philips, the creative and image director for Dior makeup, who conceptualizes high-impact beauty looks for the runway. One word of real-life advice? Don't be too heavy-handed. "Elaborate makeup can kill the mood," he notes. The key to having fun without going overboard is ease.

First, cover your bases with a foolproof foundation that stands the test of a sweltering dance floor—and the requisite dance-floor selfie. "DiorSkin Star Foundation gives you a look that's right out of a film noir by enhancing your luminosity and delivering just enough coverage," Philips says of his favorite backstage skin saver. Step two: Nothing takes your makeup up a notch—or sparks eye contact from across the room—like a wash of shimmer on the lids. "If you're wearing a simple LBD, create contrast with color," advises Philips, who loves winged-out blue tones this season. To finish, play up a flattering candlelit vibe with a quick sweep of glowy blush and a single pass of barely-there lip tint. You're out the door with time to spare—and a cool-girl look that'll last all night. —EMILY GAYNOR

SOLE MATES

A good pair of heels, fun nail polish, and a smile. Mr. Louboutin rewrites the rules on statement accessories.

It isn't every day you find yourself in a ball gown getting swept off your red bottoms by the Christian Louboutin. One second, the king of the heel and I are shaking hands (spoiler: a partial ploy to show off my newly minted Louboutin manicure in Lady Page), and the next he's tossing me over his shoulder like a mischievous boy. (Best. Day. Ever!) It's with this same Tasmanian Devil-like energy that the fabled shoemaker dashed into the beauty world. He takes an object—a heel, a handbag, and now, nail polish—and transforms it into a spectacle so over-the-top you can't help but crave it. As the legend goes: It all started with nail polish. Literally. Twenty-plus years ago, while designing his namesake shoe, the craftsman noticed his assistant painting her nails a delicious shade of red (as French women do). He borrowed it to paint the underside of the heel—and boom. A multimillion-dollar empire was conceived. Last summer, Louboutin bottled up that iconic hue for fingertips everywhere. Now the luxe line boasts 32 of the world's shiniest, longest-lasting nail colors. And while the concept of $50 polish seems about as sensible as the heels that inspired it, consider this your one big-ticket holiday wish-list item. A gift from the heart of its inventor, who is as impulsive, passionate, and powerful as the color red itself.

It was the year of Flash Tattoos, woke-up-like-this makeup, and glorious second-day hair (more on that later). And with a virtually endless stream of innovations, there's something dizzying about navigating a beauty aisle IRL.

There are the homogenous rows of mascaras pledging to take your lashes from lacking to mile-long; the lipstick that looks great in the tube but that you're not sure you'll ever actually wear; the "miracle" serums, lotions, and potions reminiscent of the half-used bottles cluttering up your bathroom. Each suitor is a gamble for your time and money. Bottom line: All you want is the truth about what's actually worth it. Right? ►

We hear you. That's why we created this shoppable roundup of the greatest beauty hits of the year (head over to teenvogue.com for the full list). Of all the launches our team scoped out, slathered on, and tested to the nth degree, these are the products that truly live up to the hype.

There's Clinique's first-ever cleansing brush, which cracks the code on gently deep-cleaning pores without irritating even the most sensitive skin (finally!). And lip chubbies—every girl's go-to for quick color—just got cooler courtesy of Marc Jacobs.

But the biggest revelation this year came courtesy of a new line of cleansing creams. Thanks to these supergentle, suds-free, sulfate-free shampoo alternatives, we've learned to wash our hair the way we would our favorite cashmere sweater: with utmost care. Bonus: Many of them double as conditioners.

As Michael Gordon, hair industry veteran and creator of Purely Perfect (aka our newest hair-care obsession), says, "People just want simple, beautiful things that work." Here's to a year of beauty shopping made easy. —E.W.

DAY 1

12:00 P.M. “Our first stop was the Bulgari headquarters, where we met creative director Lucia Silvestri and saw the incredible ‘gem table.’ We got a sneak peek of the inspiration boards and what had been planned for upcoming seasons. I’m very clumsy and was terrified that I would accidentally flip my hair and knock over every single jewel.”

1:00 P.M. “We squeezed in a quick lunch, and I was freaking out over the amazing tomatoes. Ironically, I love the food in Italy but I’m gluten-free. On my last night there, I actually found gluten-free pasta at my hotel and got a double order!”

3:30 P.M. “Next we went to Bulgari’s flagship store on Via dei Condotti. They took us upstairs to see all the pieces that were worn by Sophia Loren and Audrey Hepburn in old movies. They used to take the actresses into a private room in the back and let them shop.”

5:30 P.M. “Afterward we went to this beautiful fountain, Fontana dell’Acqua Paola, that overlooked the whole city. Then we rode around on a vintage red Vespa. I was wearing this big green dress and I felt like a princess—a jet-lagged princess!”

7:30 P.M. “Right before the sun was ➤

setting, we headed to the roof of an apartment across from the Colosseum for a few photos. It had just stopped raining, so there was a huge rainbow, and the light was just perfect. The building looked bright orange, and the sky was so blue. It was the most unbelievable moment of the trip for me."

DAY 2

6:30 A.M. "I got up early in the morning to eat breakfast and spend some time lounging in my hotel room in my bathrobe before starting the day. I stayed in a pretty suite with a big, comfy bed. I had so much fun relaxing in there."

9:30 A.M. "I was allowed to try on a bunch of pieces at the factory outside of Rome where they make the jewelry. There were serpentine rings and one with a flower where each petal was a different stone—it was so decadent. The amount of care that goes into making each item is incredible.”

11:30 A.M. “We then took a beautiful train ride to Florence to see the factory where all of the bags are made. It was enormous! The place was very clean and sterile, and all the artisans who worked there wore white. It was separated into different sections, from painting the leather to stitching it. Most of the work there is done by hand.”

6:00 P.M. “Later that day we headed back to Rome. What I love about Bulgari’s bags and jewelry is that each one you wear allows you to change your personality a little. I would pair my favorite pieces from the Serpenti collection with boyfriend jeans for day or a nice dress to go out to a party. I love wearing things that people don’t think go together, like a ball gown with sneakers. But I would never wear my Bulgari to the gym!” □

HAVANA LAFFITTE.

Sorry, it's kind of a mess right now," Austin Mahone says as we walk beneath the skylights of his massive, white-marbled bathroom, past a koi pond filled with an assortment of plants and palm trees. I'm taking the first-ever tour of the singer's new home in the Miami area. He flips the light switch to a connecting room, illuminating racks of his signature colorful shoes. "This is my closet—it's pretty serious," he says, his green eyes fixed on the center shelf. "All my Giuseppes, some Gucci, and I have some custom-made pairs." Also: They're organized. "I categorize them by, um, how expensive they are," he says, smiling.

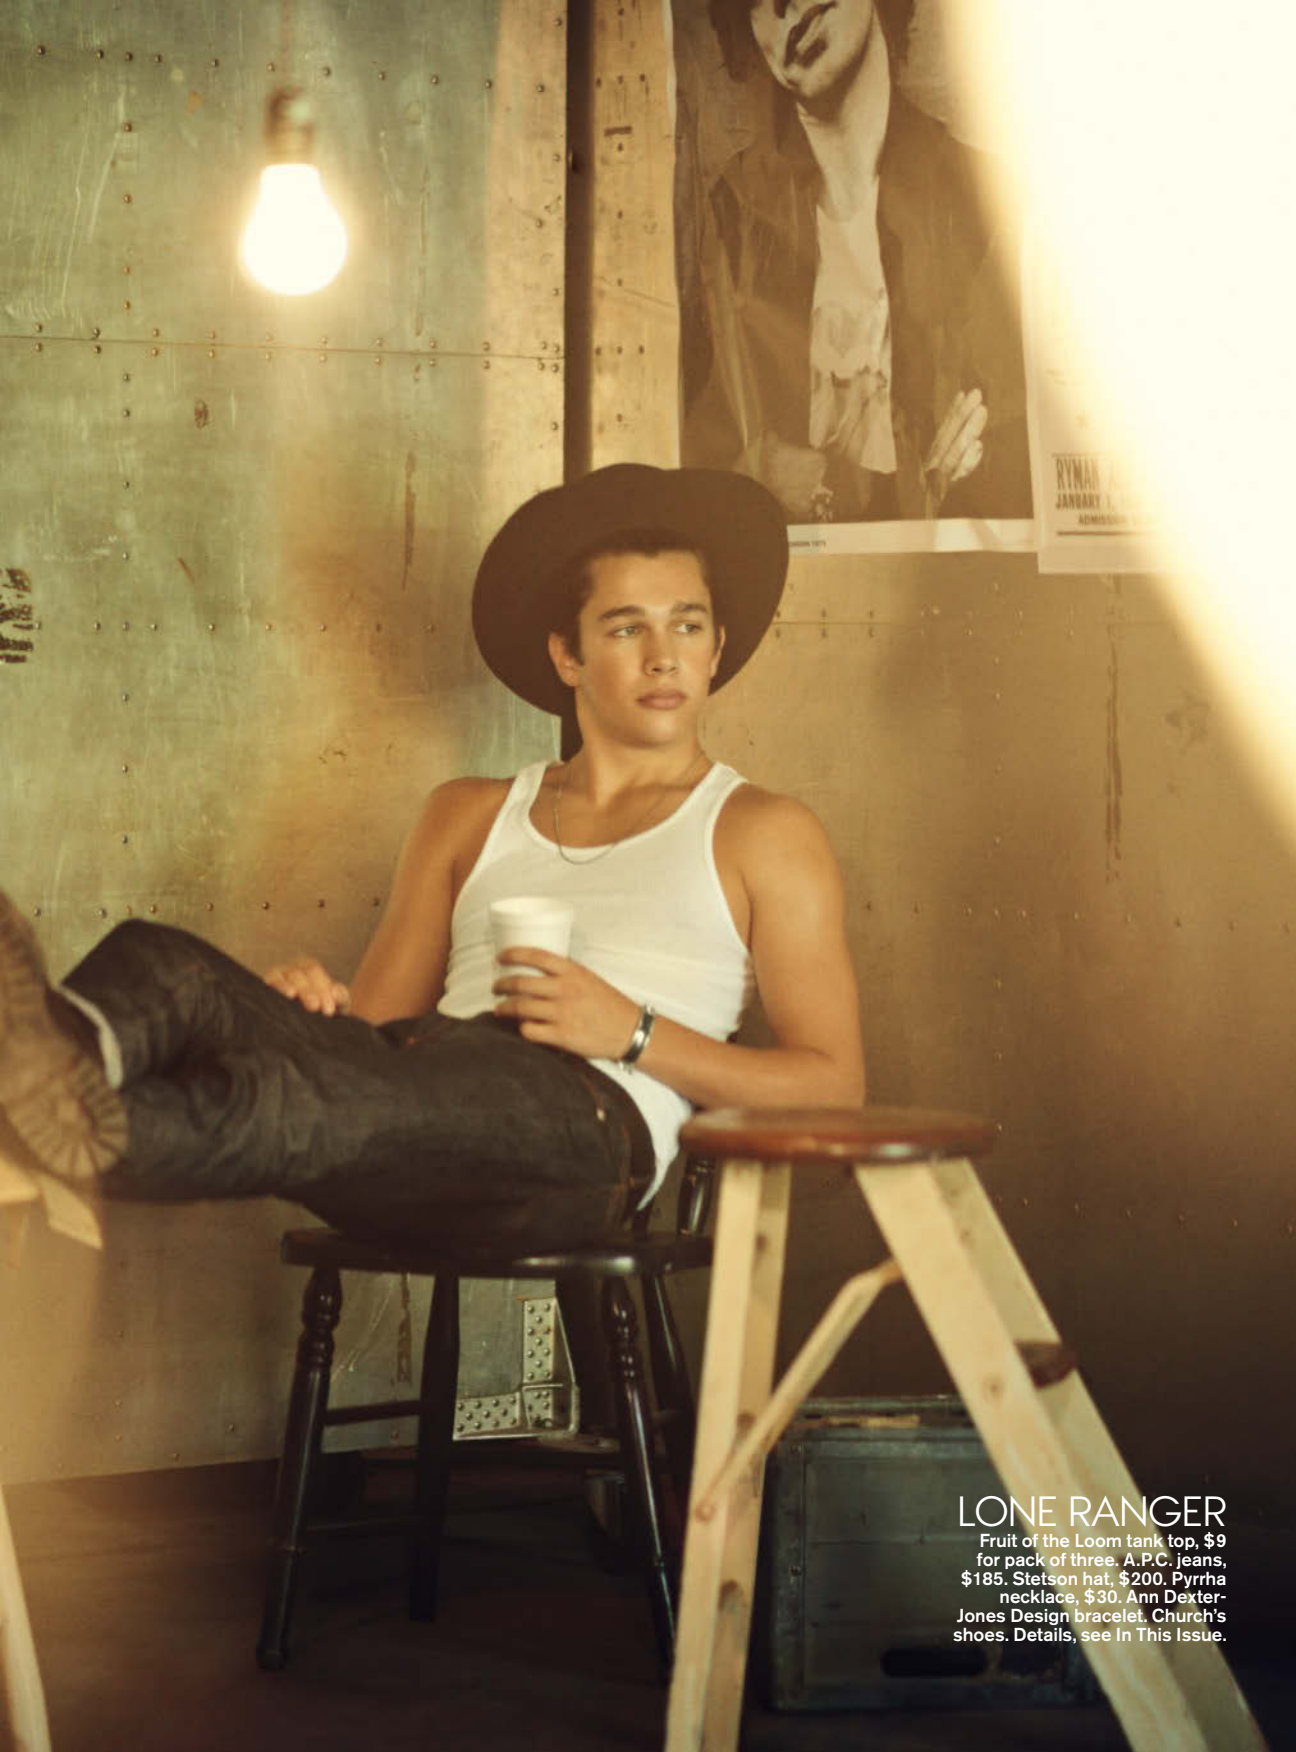

The Mahone house is a bustling place today, with Austin's friends, mom, and granddad all doing their part to install curtains, fill the fridge, set up the pool table, and unpack the guy-approved DVDs in the movie room, which boasts an LED star ceiling. "I moved in two days ago," Austin explains, shoving clothes out of the way. He opens a set of glass doors to a sprawling backyard and a grotto-esque swimming area lined with tiki torches he picked up at The Home Depot. "That's the pool—I could literally walk out there from the bathroom," he says, delighted. He takes me through his bedroom, where an episode of Family Guy is playing on a flat-screen TV, to his office, which is furnished with a red leather couch draped with a fan-made blanket, his beloved silver MTV Video Music Award Moonman in a curio cabinet, and a signed Tupac Shakur photo on the wall behind his two-computer "command center." He picks up a scented candle from his desk. "I've got salted caramel in here, cinnamon in the hallway, and vanilla cupcake in my bathroom—I have them all over the place."

It's a sweet life for the 18-year-old: In a few hours he's jetting off to take his headlining tour to Mexico, Puerto Rico, and Central and South America, with a short in-between jaunt to Los Angeles, where he'll work on his debut album with hitmaker-kingpin Max Martin. The past few days have been spent hauling belongings from his condo in Miami Beach, which he shared with his mom, Michele Mahone, and his three best friends from Texas: Alex Constancio, 19, Robert Villanueva, 18, and Zach Dorsey, 19.

Following a yearlong search, Austin decided on this three-story dream home, situated in a private, secluded neighborhood devoid of young people, after he was rejected from another property. In a world where his peers are infamously throwing raging parties in their own McMansions, who could blame the proprietor for misunderstanding the superfamous teen? "We had letters of recommendation from my condo and other people. I'm not the type of guy who's going to destroy your house," Austin insists. "But now that I'm here, I'm like, Man, this house is way cooler. Everything happens for a reason."

It's a phrase that consistently rings true for the YouTube phenom, whose life wasn't always easy. He was born in San Antonio and raised by a single mother and his maternal grandparents. Austin's father, a pro rodeo cowboy, took his ➤ own life when Austin was 16 months old. “It was only my mom and me,” he says as we sit cross-legged on his bedroom floor, leaned against a moving box. “Because there was no father or siblings, that brought us even closer.” Austin takes his red-cased iPhone out of his pocket and pulls up a picture of his dad. “That’s him when he was 10 or 11. I look exactly like him. It’s scary,” Austin says. He’s the spitting image of the boy on the screen: warm eyes, defined chin, same floppy chestnut hair. “Do you see the resemblance? It’s like we’re twins.”

What easily could have been a crippling tragedy doesn’t bring Austin down. “People are like, ‘Is it weird that you don’t have a dad?’ No,” he states.

“That’s just how I grew up, and that’s what’s normal for me. I can’t imagine having a dad. I can’t be like, ‘Hey, Dad! Want to go play catch in the yard?’ That would be weird for me to say.” Austin’s mother remarried after his father passed away.

“She wanted a father figure in my life,” he says. “But that didn’t work out.” Still, it took the sixth-grader to La Vernia, Texas, where his life changed: He met Alex, Robert, and Zach and further developed his talent for freestyle singing, guitar, and piano. “If I hadn’t met them, I wouldn’t be where I am now,” Austin notes. The crew started posting videos on YouTube after school of Austin, 14 at the time, singing top-ten hits because Austin had a theory ► that users just might stumble upon him that way. He was right. He left high school for homeschooling, and his mother quit her job as a loan officer to help manage his burgeoning career. "It is probably the coolest thing a parent could do—to have hope and faith in what I'm doing," he says. "I felt a lot of pressure on me and was like, OK, I definitely have to go hard now. I've gotta be the man of the house and make the money and provide for my family."

Already on his way to becoming a mini mogul, Austin would Skype with fans for a fee and fly all over the country to perform at birthday parties for his new Mahomies (what he calls his most passionate fans) in order to buy music equipment. This led to a record deal and his extraordinary first major gig: opening for Taylor Swift's Red tour to a stadium crowd. Four managers and several Hollywood agents later, he's got hit singles ("What About Love," "Mmm Yeah"), major endorsements, an EP, and a book deal. His dream? "To sell out the AT&T Center," he says without missing a beat. "That's where the [San Antonio] Spurs play."

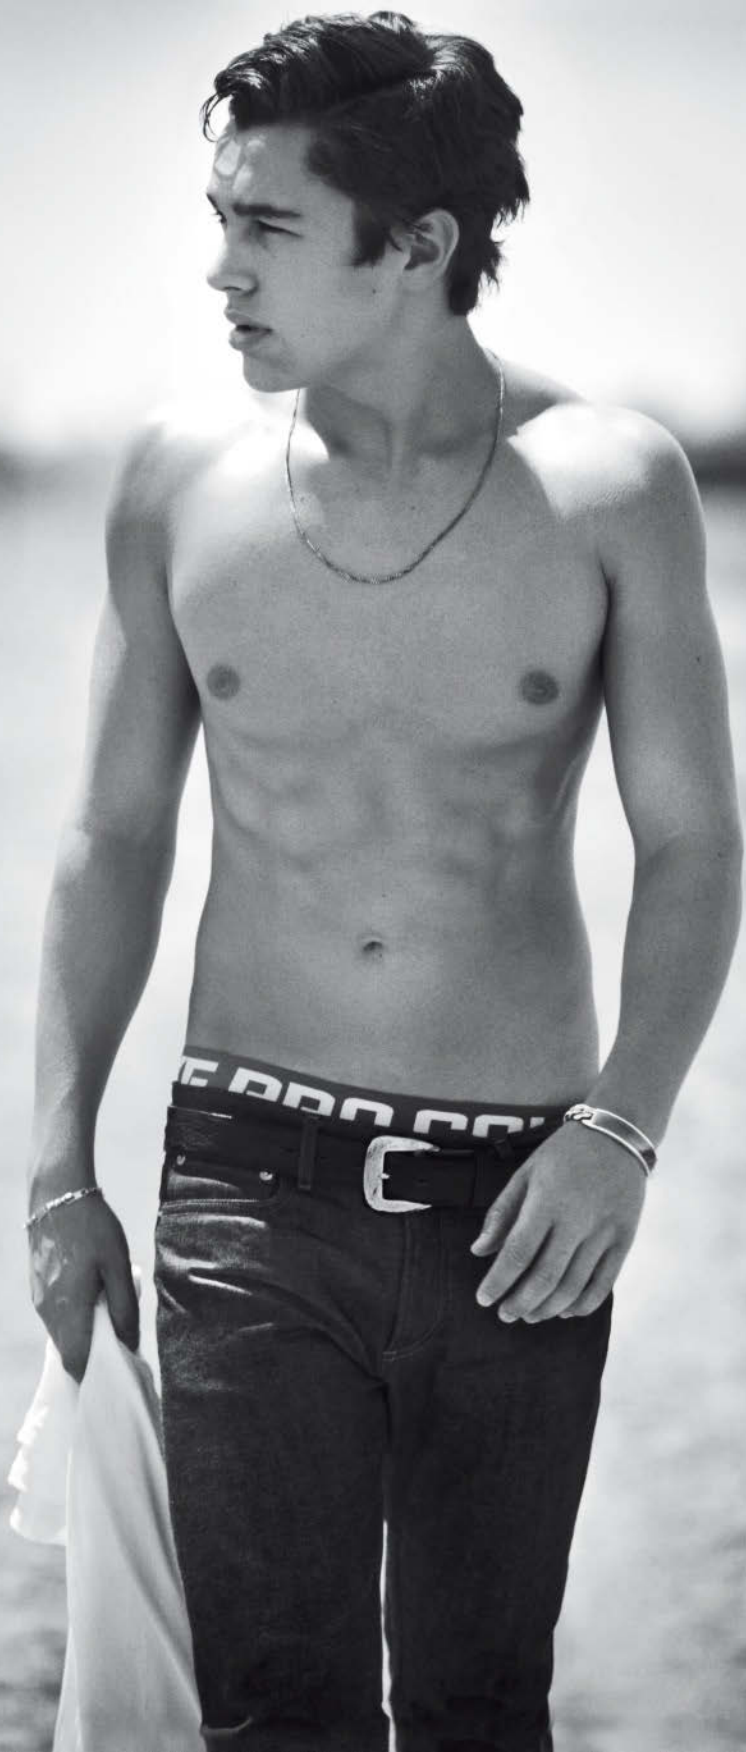

Austin's life is balanced, thanks in large part to his pals, who are of the "I don't pop Molly—I rock Tom Ford" mentality. "It's all about the team you hang out with. My friends, they're all cool, they're all clean," he says. "I don't want to be that guy who is having problems and going to rehab. I am focused on the music." Nor does Austin feel any pressure to get body ink. "I can't see myself all tatted up," he says. "We'll see, but right now I don't have the need or desire to get any." One of the boys always joins him on the road (currently it's Robert), where "The Foolish Four," as the group refers to themselves, indulge their infatuation with chain restaurants, mainly Olive Garden. And there's a new support system in Austin's life—his girlfriend, Fifth Harmony's Camila Cabello. "I wasn't looking for a relationship, but we became really good friends when we were on tour," Austin reveals. "She's an amazing girl, and we have the best time together."

But America's heartthrob is no less dedicated to his craft. "Every day I want to learn something different about being a better producer, writer, dancer, or vocalist," he says. "I want people to say, 'Hey, go watch Austin's live show and study it. Do it like Austin.' I'm so impatient—I just want to get there." He has one thing to take care of first: ending his longtime struggle with tonsillitis (which postponed his MTV Artist to Watch tour in 2013) with surgery scheduled for early next year. After that, there's nothing standing in his way. "If my dad didn't pass away, I would probably be a cowboy," he reflects. "My whole family on his side was strictly cowboys." But it comes as no surprise that Austin made his own fate. "I have a long way to go, and many years ahead of me, but I want to be a musical icon. I want to be the best in the world." —DANA MATHEWS

On a perfect Saturday in Los Angeles, at a house in the dusty hills northwest of the city, Kaia Gerber is jumping up and down on a trampoline, smiles breaking easily across her face as a photographer snaps away. A stylist has piled several layers of denim onto her tall frame, but if she's hot in the 75-degree weather, you wouldn't know it. Off to the side, Kaia's family, who have come to support the 13-year-old at her first magazine shoot, look on proudly: There's her father, businessman Rande Gerber, her 15-year-old brother, Presley, and her mother, who happens to be modeling legend Cindy Crawford.

While it's Kaia's second major photo shoot following her appearance in a Young Versace campaign when she was 10, it would be impossible to say how many her mom has clocked over the years. Did her mom pass along any modeling advice? "She knows so much about it," Kaia says between takes, sipping on a blended chai Frappuccino. "I think it would be hard for her to be on set and not say things like, 'Psst, Kaia, put your elbow up.'"

Not that her daughter, who is well-spoken and warm, needs much direction. In front of the camera Kaia is easygoing, expressive, and clearly having fun. And, genes aside, her love of acting, musical theater, and dance (she takes a hip-hop class three times a week) are to thank for her stage presence. The California native has enjoyed being a part of local productions so much, she's even begun auditioning for roles in Hollywood. "I like to explore beyond who I am so I can feel for other people," Kaia explains of the draw toward acting. "When you become someone else, you better understand others." It's not surprising, then, that she loves narratives like John Green's The Fault in Our Stars, or that creative writing, which gives her the opportunity to tell other people's stories, is her favorite subject.

As far as personal style goes, Kaia's skews toward classic California teen. "I'm not superglam," she explains after emerging from a trailer in a white Rag & Bone T-shirt, black Bullhead jeans, and black platform sneakers by Ash. "I wear jeans and a T-shirt most of the time." A glance at her Instagram, meanwhile, shows her sporting plaid shirts and Converse high-tops with dresses and floppy felt hats. Her inspiration? West Coast Instagrammer @thenativefox. Of course, there are some things that separate Kaia from her Malibu peers. Growing up, her mom's friends were "really pretty" women she knew as "Christy, Naomi, and Linda." "At the time, I didn't realize they were all part of that era," Kaia says reflectively. "Now it's cool to look at pictures of Mom when she was closer to my age. I don't really see the resemblance," she shrugs, "but everyone says it's there, so I trust them."

That family likeness—endless legs, glossy chestnut waves, olive skin, soulful brown eyes—doesn't necessarily indicate that Kaia's headed for the runways, especially given her breadth of interests. "I love modeling, but I also want to explore other things," she muses. And with their insider's perspective on the industry, her family is in no rush, either. "She doesn't want me to start a career too young," Kaia says of her mother. "She started modeling when she was 16, but that world is very different now." The eighth-grader also has a realistic understanding of what the profession entails: lots of travel, but also the ability to raise awareness about causes. In fact, she and her mom just returned from a trip to Peru with Orbis, an organization that provides eye surgery to adults and children throughout the world. But Kaia also knows the work involved. "I've seen my mom do it, and it seems exhausting," she says. "It's not easy—you're in heels all the time and constantly having to dress up. If that's your job, jeans and a T-shirt are all you really dream of." —MOLLY CREEDEN

CLARA MAMET

This up-and-coming starlet is more than ready for the spotlight.

Bearing a last name that flings open doors on both stage and screen—and major talent to back it up—Clara Mamet is set for big things. Just don't try to put her in a box. "When people ask me what I do, I bounce back and forth," says the 20-year-old, who wrote, directed, and starred in *Two-Bit Waltz, an autobiographical coming-of-age tale released in October. "I pick whatever seems coolest in the moment."

Clara was born to perform: She's the half sister of Girls actress Zosia Mamet and the daughter of Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright and Oscar-nominated screenwriter David Mamet. But the triple threat doesn't take her gifts for granted, particularly when it comes to roles behind the lens. "It was a huge learning curve," she admits of her writing-and-directing stint. As for the acting? Don't expect Clara to watch herself in any of her other work. "It's freaky—like looking in the mirror and seeing someone different," she says.

When it comes to style, the L.A. resident deadpans that "dirty old sweatpants" is the reflection that usually comes back. "But I have a pair of silk pajamas I wear everywhere!" With her closet pinned down and her career on the rise, Clara is well on her way to her goal for the future: "Be fabulous!"
